

ABSTRACT

5 The present invention relates to a device for preventing transmission of body fluids between two persons during sexual relations. The device is formed of an elastic material and has a first inner side, coated with a glue contrived to fix said device to at least a part of the man's sexual organ, and a second part contrived to burst upon ejaculation.